AREOPAGITICA.
A SPEECH OF MR. JOHN MILTON FOR THE LIBERTY OF UNLICENC'D PRINTING, TO THE PARLAMENT OF ENGLAND.

τούλευσαν ο' ἐκεῖνος τίς θέλει πόλει χριστόν τι θουλευμ' ἐς μέσον φέραιν ἔχων; καὶ ταῦθ' ὁ χρίζων λαμπρός ἔσσ', ὁ μὴ θέλων σιμ. τί τούτων ἐστ' ἰσαίτερον πόλει;

Euripid. Hicetid.

This is true Liberty when free born men Having to advise the public may speak free, Which he who can, and will, deserve's high praise, Who neither can nor will, may hold his peace;
What can be juster in a State then this?

Euripid. Hicetid.
FOR THE LIBERTY OF UNLICENCE'D PRINTING.

THO' WHO TO STATES & GOVERNORS OF THE COMMONWEALTH DIRECT THEIR SPEECH, HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT, OR WANTING SUCH ACCESE IN A PRIVATE CONDITION, WRITE THAT WHICH THEY FORESEE MAY ADVANCE THE PUBLICK GOOD; I SUPPOSE THEM AS AT THE BEGINNING, OF NO MEANE ENDEAVOR, NOT A LITTLE ALTER'D AND MOV'D INWARDLY IN THEIR MINDES: SOME WITH DOUBT OF WHAT WILL BE THE SUCCESSE, OTHERS WITH FEAR OF WHAT WILL BE THE CENSURE, SOME WITH HOPE, OTHERS WITH CONFIDENCE OF WHAT THEY HAVE TO SPEAKE, AND ME PERHAPS EACH OF THESE DISPOSITIONS, AS THE SUBJECT WAS WHEREON I ENTER'D, MAY HAVE AT OTHER TIMES VARIOUSLY AFFECTED; & LIKELY MIGHT IN THESE FOREMOST EXPRESSIONS, NOW ALSO DISCLOSE WHICH OF THEM SWAY'D MOST, BUT THAT THE VERY ATTEMPT OF THIS ADDRESSE THUS MADE, AND THE THOUGHT OF WHOM IT HATH RECORSE TO, HATH GOTT THE POWER WITHIN ME TO A PASSION, FARRE MORE WELCOME THEN INCIDENTAL TO A PREFACE. WHICH THOUGH I STAY NOT TO CONFESE ERE ANY ASKE, I SHALL BE BLAMELESS, IF IT BE NO OTHER, THEN THE JOY AND GRATULATION WHICH IT BRINGS TO ALL WHO WISH & PROMOTE THEIR COUNTRIES LIBERTY; WHEREOF THIS WHOLE DISCOURSE PROPOS'D WILL BE A CERTAINE TESTIMONY, IF NOT A TROPH'Y. FOR THIS IS NOT THE LIBERTY WHICH WEE CAN HOPE, THAT no grievance ever should arise in the Commonwealth, that let no man in this World expect; but when complaints are freely heard, deeply consider'd, and speedily reform'd, then is the utmost bound of civil liberty attain'd, that wise men looke for. To which if I now manifest by the very sound of this which I shall utter, that wee are already in good part arriv'd, and yet from such a steepe disadvantage of tyranny & superstition grounded into our principles as was beyond the manhood of a Roman recovery, it will bee attributed first, as is most due, to the strong assistance of God our deliverer, next to your faithfull guidance and undaunted Wisdome, Lords and Commons of England. Neither is it in Gods esteme the diminution of his glory, when honourable things are spoken of good men & worthy Magistrates; which if I now first should begin to doe, after so fair a progress of your laudable deeds, & such a long obligement upon the whole Realme to your indefatigable vertues, I might be justly reckn'd among the tardiest, & the unwillingest of them that praise yee. Neverthesse there being three principall things, without which all praising is but Courtship and flattery, First, when that only is prais'd which is solidly worth praise: next, when greatest likehhoods are brought that such things are truly and really in those persons to whom they are ascrib'd, the other, when he who praises, by shewing that such his actuall perswasion is of whom he writes, can demonstrate that he flatters not; the former two of these I have heretofore endeavou'rd, rescuing the employment from him who went about to impair your merits with a trivial and malignant Encomium; the latter as belonging chiefly to mine owne acquittall, that whom I so extoll'd I did not flatter, hath been reserv'd opportune to this occasion. For he who freely magnifies what hath been nobly done, and fears not to declare as freely what might be done better, gives ye the best cov'nant of his fidelity; and that his loyallest affection and his hope waits on your proceedings. His highest praising is not flattery, and his plainest advice is a kinde of praising; for though I should affirm and hold by argument, that it would fare better with truth, with learning, and the Commonwealth, if one of your publisht Orders which I should name, were call'd in, yet at the same time it could not but much redound to the lustre of your milde and equall Government, when as private persons are hereby animated to thinke ye better pleas'd with publick advice, then other statists have been delighted heretofore with publicke flattery. And men will then see what difference there is between the magnanimity of a trienniall Parliament, and that jealous hautinesse of Prelates and cabin Counsellours that usurpt of late, when as they shall observe yee in the midd'st of your Victories and successes more gently against the Court. Courtship and flattery are worthy to be reseru'd, but to the lessens of the latter. Proclaiming your resolves, presumtions of your Lordships publick and private duties to gain the good of your land with hope and espressing, which being known in the highest esteeem of the most sages and most gantle of all the barbers. The last place in my weight and time is to desire our gentlemen and the rest of the longings from this. Courtship and flattery are the worst of all the forms of a just Government. Those that have a desire to establish a true and sure Government, must study to be acquainted with only what is true; and then, when they are certain that they have established a strong and steady root of the true and sure Government, & I cannot but wish that your PUBLICK SCIENCE, & I mean the back of a little book to be written.
gently brooking writ’n exceptions against a voted Order, then other Courts, which had product nothing worth memory but the weakest ostentation of wealth, would have endured the least signifi’d dislike at any sudden Proclamation. If I should thus farre presume upon the meek demeanour of your civil and gentle greatness, Lords and Commons, as what your publish Order hath directly said, that to gainsay, I might defend my selfe with ease, if any should accuse me of being new or insolent, did they but know how much better I find ye esteem it to imitate the old and elegant humanity of Greece, then the barbarick pride of a Hunnish & Norwegian statelines. And out of those ages, to whose polite wisdom and letters we ow that we are not yet Gothes and Jutlanders, I could name him who from his private house wrote that discourse to the Parliament of Athens, that persuades them to change the forme of Democracy which was then establisht. Such honour was done in those dayes to men who profest the study of wisdom and eloquence, not only in their own Country, but in other Lands, that Cities and Sinories heard them gladly, and with great respect, if they had ought in publick to admonish the State. Thus did Dion Pruscceus a stranger and a privat Orator counsell the Rhodians against a former Edict: & I abound with other like examples, which to set heer would be superfluous. But if from the industry of a life wholly dedicated to studious labours, & those natural endowments haply not the worst for two and fifty degrees of northern latitude, so much must be derogated, as to count me not equal to any of those who had this privilege. I would obtain to be thought not so inferior, as your selves are superior to the most of them who receiv’d their counsell: and how farre you excell them, be assur’d, Lords & Commons, there can no greater testimony appear, then when your prudent spirit acknowledges and obeyes the voice of reason from what quarter soever it be heard speaking; & renders ye as willing to repeal any Act of your own setting forth, as any set forth by your Predecessors.

If ye be thus resolv’d, as it were injury to thinke ye were not, I know not what should withhold me from presenting ye with a fit instance wherein to show both that love of truth which ye eminently professe, and that uprightness of your judgement which is not wont to be partial to your selves; by judging over again that Order which ye have ordain’d to regulate Printing. «That no Book, pamphlet, or paper «shall be henceforth Printed, unlesse «the same be first approv’d & licence «by such», or at least one of such as shall be thereto appointed. For that part which preserves justly every mans Copy to himselfe, or provides for the poor, I touch not, only wish they be not made pretenses to abuse and persecute honest & painfull Men, who offend not in either of these par ticulars. But that other clause of Licencing Books, which we thought had dy'd with his brother quadragesimal and matrimonial when the Prelats expir'd, I shall now attend with such a Homily, as shall lay before ye, first the inventors of it to bee those whom ye will be loath to own; next what is to be thought in generall of reading, what ever sort the Books be; and that this Order avails nothing to the suppressing of scandalous, seditious, & libellous Books, which were mainly intended to be supprest. Last, that it will be primely to the discouragement of all learning, & the stop of Truth, not only by the disexercising & blunting our abilities, in what we know already, but by hindring and cropping the discovery that might bee yet further made both in religious and civill Wisdome.

I

DENY not, but that it is of greatest concernment in the Church & Commonwealth, to have a vigilant eye how Bookes demeane themselves as well as men; & thereafter to confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors: For Books are not absolutely dead things, but doe contain a potencie of life in them to be as active as that soule was whose progeny they are; nay they do preserve as in a violl the purest efficacie and extraction of that living intellect that bred them. I know they are as lively, and as vigorously productive, as those fabulos Dragon's teeth; and being sown up & down, may chance to spring up armed men. And yet, on the other hand, un-lesse warinesse be us'd, as good almost kill a Man as kill a good Book; who kills a Man kills a reasonable creature, Gods Image; but hee who destroys a good Bookke, kills reason it selfe, kills the Image of God, as it were in the eye.

Many a man lives a burden to the Earth; but a good Bookke is the pretious life, blood of a master spirit, imbalm'd & treasur'd up on purpose to a life beyond life. 'Tis true no age can restore a life, whereof perhaps there is no great losse; and revolutions of ages do not oft recover the losse of a rejected truth, for the want of which whole nations fare the worse. We should be wary therefore what persecution we raise against the living labours of publick men, how we spill that season'd life of man preserv'd and stor'd up in Books; since we see a kinde of homicide may be thus committ'd, sometimes a martyrdom, & if it extend to the whole impression, a kinde of massacre, whereof the execution ends not in the slaying of an elemental life, but strikes at that ethereal and fift essence, the breath of reason it selfe, slais an immortality rather then a life. But lest I should be condemn'd of introducing licence, while I oppose Licencing, I refuse not the paines to be so much Historicaall, as will serve to shew what hath been done by ancient and famous Commonwealths, against this disorder, till the very time that this project of licencing crept out of the Inquisition, was catcht up by our Prelates, and hath caught some of our Presbyters.

In Athens, where Books & Wits were ever busier than in any part of Greece, I find but only two sorts of writings which the Magistrate car’d to take notice of; those either blasphemous and Atheisticall, or Libellous. Thus the Books of Protagoras were by the Judges of Areopagus commanded to be burnt, & himself banisht the territory for a discourse, begun with his confessing not to know whether there were gods, or whether not; And against defaming, it was decreed that none should be traduc’d by name; as was the manner of Vetus Comœdia, whereby we may guesse how they censur’d libelling: And this course was quick enough, as Cicero writes, to quell both the desperate wits of other Atheists, and the open way of defaming, as the event shew’d. Of other sects and opinions though tending to voluptuousnesse, and the denying of divine providence they tooke no heed. Therefore we do not read that either Epicurus, or that libertine school of Cyrene, or what the Cynick impudence utter’d, was ever question’d by the Laws. Neither is it recorded that the writings of those old Comedians were supprest, though the acting of them were forbid; and that Plato commended the reading of Aristophanes the loosest of them all, to his royall scholler Dionysius, is commonly known, and may be excus’d; if holy Chrysostome, at is reported, nightly studied so much the same Author & had the art to cleanse a scurrilous vehemence into the stile of a rousing Sermon. That other leading City of Greece, Lacedemon, considering that Lycurgus their Law-giver was so addicted to elegant learning, as to have been the first that brought out of Ionia the scatter’d works of Homer, and sent the Poet Thales from Creet to prepare and mollifie the Spartan surlinesse with his smooth songs & odes, the better to plant among them law & civility, it is to be wonder’d how museless & unbookish they were, minding nought but the feats of Warre. There needed no licencing of Books among them for they dislik’d all, but their owne Laconick Apothegms, and took a slight occasion to chase Archilochus out of their City, perhaps for composing in a higher straine then their owne souls dierly ballats and roundels could reach to: Or if it were for his broad verses, they were not therein so cautious, but they were so dissolute in their profoumiscuous conversing; whence Euripides affirms, in Andromache, that their women were all unchaste. Thus much may give us light after what sort Bookes were prohibited among the Greeks. The Romans also for many ages train’d up only to a militar roughnesse, resembling most of the Lacedæmonian guise, knew of learning little but what their twelve Tables, and the Pontificck College with their Augurs and Flamins taught them in Religion & Law, so unacquainted with other learning, that when Carneades and Critolaus, with the Stoick Dioge, nies, comming Ambassadors to Rome, toke thereby occasion to give the City a task of their Philosophy, they were suspected for seducers by no lesse a man than Cato the Censor, who mov'd it in the Senat to dismissem them speedilie, & to banish all such Attick bablers out of Italy. But Scipio & others of the noblest Senators withstood him and his old Sabin austerity; honour'd and admir'd the men; and the Censor himself at last in his old age fell to the study of that whereof before hee was so scrupulous. And yet at the same time Nævius and Plautus, the first Latine comedians had fill'd the City with all the borrow'd Scenes of Menander and Philemon. Then began to be consider'd there also what was to be don to libellous books and Authors; for Nævius was quickly cast into prison for his unbridl'd pen, and releas'd by the Tribunes upon his recantation: We read also that libels were burnt, and the makers punish'd by Augustus. The like severity no doubt was us'd, if ought were impiously writ'n against their esteemed gods. Except in these two points, how the world went in Books, the Magistrat kept no reckning. And therefore Lucretius, without impeachm't, versifies his Epicurism to Memmius, & had the honour to be set forth the second time by Cicero so great a father of the Commonwealth; although himselfe disputes against that opinion in his own writings. Nor was the Satyrical sharpnesse or naked plainnes of Lucilius, or Catullus, or Flaccus, by any order prohibited. And for matters of State, the story of Titus Livius, though it extoll'd that part which Pompey held, was not therefore suppress'd by Octavius Caesar of the other Faction. But that Nasso was by him banisht in his old age, for the wanton Poems of his youth, was but a meer covert of State over some secret cause: and besides, the Books were neither banisht nor call'd in. From hence we shall meet with little else but tyranny in the Roman Empire, that we may not marvell, if not so often bad, as good Books were silenc't. I shall therefore deem to have bin large enough in producing what among the ancients was punishable to write, save only which, all other arguments were free to treat on.

By this time the Emperours were become Christians, whose discipline in this point I do not finde to have bin more severe then what was formerly in practice. The Books of those whom they took to be grand Hereticks were examin'd, refuted, and condemnd in the generall Councils; and not till then were prohibited, or burnt by authority of the Emperor. As for the writings of Heathen authors, unless they were plaine invective against Christianity, as those of Porphyrius and Proclus, they met with no interdict that can be cited, till about the year 400, in a Carthaginian Council, wherein Bishops themselves were forbid to read the Books of Gentiles, but Heresies they might read; while others others long before them on the contrary scrupled more the Books of Heretics, then of Gentiles. And that the primitive Councils and Bishops were wont only to declare what Books were not commendable, passing no further, but leaving it to each one's conscience to read or to lay by, till after the year 800, is observable already by Padre Paolo the great unmasker of the Trentine Council. After which time the Popes of Rome engrossing what they pleas'd of Politicall rule into their own hands, extended their dominion over men's eyes, as they had before over their judgements, burning & prohibiting to be read, what they sancioned not; yet sparing in their censures, and the Books not many which they so dealt with: till Martin the 5. by his Bull not only prohibited, but was the first that excommunicated the reading of heretical Books; for about that time Wiclif and Husse growing terrible, were they who first drove the Papall Court to a stricter policy of prohibiting. Which course Leo the 10. and his successors follow'd, until the Councell of Trent, and the Spanish Inquisition engaging together brought forth, or perfected those Catalogues, and expunging Indexes that rake through the entalls of many an old good Author, with a violation worse then any could be offer'd to his tomb. Nor did they stay in matters Heretical, but any subject that was not to their palat, they either condemn'd in a prohibition, or had it strait into the new Purgatory of an Index. To fill up the measure of encroachment, their last invention was to ordain that no Book, pamphlet, or paper should be Printed, (as if S. Peter had bequeathed them the keys of the Presse also out of Paradise) unless it were approv'd and licenc'd under the hands of 2 or 3 glutinous Friers. For Example:

Let the Chancellor Cini be pleas'd to see if in this present work be contain'd ought that may withstand the Printing;

Vincent Rabatta Vicar of Florence.

I have seen this present work, and finde nothing athwart the Catholick faith and good manners: In witness whereof I have given, &c.

Nicolò Cini, Chancellor of Florence.

Attending the precedent relation, it is allow'd that this present work of Davanzati may be Printed, Vincent Rabatta, &c.

It may be Printed, July 15.

Friar Simon Monpezi d'Amelia Chancellor of the holy office in Florence.

SURE they have a conceit, if he of the bottomlesse pit had not long since broke prison, that this quadruple exorcism would barre him down. I feare their next designe will be to get into their custody the licensing of that which they say Claudius intended, but went not through with. Voutsafe to see another of their forms the Roman stamp:

Imprimatur, If it seem good to the reverend Master of the holy Palace, Belcastro, Vicegerent.

Quo venit daret flatur crepitumque ventris in c. vivio emit. (Suetont Claudio.) Imprimatur, Friar Nicolo Rodolphi Master of the holy Palace.

SOMETIMES 5 Imprimitur are seen together dialo guewise in the Piazza of one Title page, complementing and ducking each to other with their shav’n reverences, whether the Author, who stands by in perplexity at the foot of his Epistle, shall to the Presse or to the sponge. These are the pretty responsories, these are the dear Antiphonies that so bewitch of late our Prelats, & their Chaplaines with the goodly Eccho they made; and besotted us to the gay imitation of a lordly Imprimatur, one from Lambeth house, another from the West end of Pauls; so apishly Romanizing, that the word of command still was set downe in Latine; as if the learned Grammaticall pen that wrote it, would cast no ink without Latine; or perhaps, as they thought, because no vulgar tongue was worthy to express the pure conceit of an imprimitur; but rather, as I hope, for that our English, the language of men ever famous, and formost in the achievements of liberty, will not easily finde servile letters anow to spell such a dictatorial presumption English. And thus ye have the inventors & the originall of Book, licensing ript up, and drawn as linearly as any pedigree. We have it not, that can be heard of, from any ancient State, or politic, or Church, nor by any Statute left us by our Ancestors, BUT some will say, what though the Inventors were bad, the thing for all that may be good? It may so: yet if that thing be no such deep invention, but obvious, and easie for any man to light on, and yet best and wisest Commonwealths through all ages, and occasions have forborne to use it, and falsest seducers, and oppressors of men were the first who took it up, & to no other purpose but to obstruct and hinder the first approach of Reformation; I am of those who beleue, it will be a harder alchemy then Lullius ever knew, to sublimat any good use out of such an invention. Yet this only is what I request to gain from this reason, that it may be held a dangerous and suspicious fruite, as certainly it deserves, for the tree that bore it, untill I can dissect one by one the properties it has. But I have first to finish as was propounded, what is to be thought in generall of reading Books, what ever sort they be, and whether be more the benefit, or the harm that thence proceeds?

NOT to insist upon the examples of Moses, Daniel and Paul, who were skilful in all the learning of the Egyptians, Caldeans, and Greeks, which could not probably be without reading their Books of all sorts, in Paul especially, who thought it no defilement to insert into holy Scripture the sentences of three Greek Poets, and one of them a Tragedian, the question was, notwithstanding sometimes controverted among the Primitive Doctors, but with great odds on that side which affirm'd it both lawfull and profitable, as was then evidently perceiv'd, when Julian the Apostat, & suttlest enemy to our faith, made a decree forbidding Christians the study of heathen learning: for, said he, they wound us with our own weapons, and with our owne arts and sciences they overcome us. And indeed the Christians were put so to their shifts by this crafty means, and so much in danger to decline into all ignorance, that the two Apollinarii were fain as a man may say, to coin all the seven liberall Sciences out of the Bible, reducing it into divers forms of Orations, Poems, Dialogues, & n'to the calculating of a new Christian Grammar. But saith the Historian Socrates, The providence of God provided better then the industry of Apollinaris and his son, by taking away that illiterat law with the life of him who devis'd it. So great an injury they then held it to be depriv'd of Hellenick learning; and thought it a persecution more undermining, and secretly decaying the Church then the open cruelty of Decius or Dioclesian. And perhaps it was the same politic drift that the Divell whipt St. Jerom in a Lenten dream, for reading Cicero; or else it was a fantasme bred by the fearer which had then seiz'd him. For had an angel bin his discipliner, unlesse it were for dwelling too much upon Ciceronianisms, & had chaitiz'd the reader... ing, not the vanity, it had bin plainly partiall; first to correct him for grave Cicero, & not for scurrill Plautus whom he confesses to have bin reading not long before; next to correct him only, and let so many more ancient Fathers wax old in those pleasant and florid studies without the lash of such a tutoring apparition; insomuch that Basil teaches how some good use may be made of Margites a sportfull Poem, not now extant, writ by Homer; and why not then of Morgante an Italian Romanze much to the same purpose. But if it be agreed we shall be try'd by visions, there is a vision recorded by Eusebius far ancieneter then this tale of Jerom to the nun Eustochium, and besides has nothing of a favor in it. Dionysius Alexandrinus was about the year 240, a person of great name in the Church for piety and learning, who had wont to avail himself much against hereticks by being conversant in their Books; untill a certain Presbyter laid it scrupulously to his conscience, how he durst venture himselfe among those defiling volumes. The worthy man loath to give offence fell into a new debate with himselfe what was to be thought; when suddenly a vision sent from God, it is his own Epistle that so averss it, confirm'd him in these words: Read any books whatever come to thy hands, for thou art sufficient both to judge aright, & to examine each matter. To this revelation he assented the sooner, as he confesses, because it was answerable to that of the Apostle to the Thessalonians, Prove all things, hold fast that which is good. And he might have added another remarkable saying of the same Author: To the pure all things are pure, not only meats & drinks, but all kinde of knowledge whether of good or evill; the knowledge cannot defile, nor consequently the books, if the will & conscience be not defil'd. For books are as meats & viands are, some of good, some of evill substance; and yet God in that unapocryphall vision said without exception, Rise Peter, kill and eat, leaving the choice to each mans discretion. Wholesome meats to a vitiated stomach differ little or nothing from unwholesome; & best books to a naughty mind are not unappliable to occasions of evill. Bad meats will scarce breed good nourishment in the healthiest concoction; but herein the difference is of bad books, that they to a discreet & judicious Reader serve in many respects to discover, to confute, to forewarn, and to illustrate. Whereof what better wittnes can ye expect I should produce, then one of your own now sitting in Parliament, the chief of learned men reputed in this Land, Mr. Selden, whose volume of naturall and national laws, proves not only by great authorities brought together, but by exquisite reasons and theorems almost mathematically demonstratible, that all opinions, yea errors, known, read, and collated, are of main service and assistance toward the speedy attainment of what is truest. I conceive therefore, that when God did enlarge the universall diet of mans body, saving ever the rules of temperance, he then also, as before, left arbitrary the dyeting and repasting of our minds; as wherein every mature man might have to exercise his own leading capacity. How great a virtue is temperance, how much of moment through the whole life of man? yet God commits the managing so great a trust, without particular Law or prescription, wholly to the demeanour of every grown man. And therefore when he himself tabl’d the Jews from heaven, that Omer which was every man’s daily portion of Manna, is computed to have bin more then might have well suffic’d the heartiest feeder thrice as many meals. For those actions which enter into a man, rather then issue out of him, and therefore defile not, God uses not to captivat under a perpetuell childhood of prescription, but trusts him with the gift of reason to be his own chooser; there were but little work left for preaching, if law and compulsion show grow so fast upon those things which heretofore were govern’d only by exhortation. Salomon informs us that much reading is a wearines to the flesh; but neither he, nor other inspir’d author tells us that such, or such reading is unlawful: yet certainly had God thought good to limit us herein, it had bin much more expedient to have told us what was unlawful, then what was wearisome. As for the burning of those Ephesian books by St. Pauls converts, tis reply’d the books were magick, the Syriack so renders them. It was a privat act, a voluntary act, and leaves us to a voluntary imitation: the men in remorse burnt those books which were their own; the Magistrat by this example is not appointed: these men practiz’d the books, another might perhaps have read them in some sort usefully. Good and evill we know in the field of this World grow up together almost inseparably; and the knowledge of good is so involv’d and interwoven with the knowledge of evill, and in so many cunning resemblances hardly to be discern’d, that those confused seeds which were impos’d on Psyche as an incessant labour to cull out, and sort asunder, were not more intermixture. It was from out the rinde of one apple tasted, that the knowledge of good and evill as two twins cleaving together leapt forth into the World. And perhaps this is that doom which Adam fell into of knowing good and evill, that is to say of knowing good by evill. As therefore the state of man now is; what wisdome can there be to choose, what continence to forbear without the knowledge of evill? He that can apprehend and consider vice with all her baits and seeming pleasures, and yet abstain, and yet distinguish, & yet prefer that which is truly better, he is the true warfaring Christian. I cannot praise a fugitive & cloister’d vertue unexercis’d & unbreath’d, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race, where that immortal garland is to be run for, not without dust and heat.
Assuredly we bring not innocence into the world, we bring impurity much rather; that which purifies us is trial, and trial is by what is contrary. That virtue therefore which is but a youngling in the contemplation of evil, and knows not the utmost that vice promises to her followers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, not a pure; her whiteness is but an exterior whiteness. Which was the reason why our sage and serious Poet Spencer, whom I dare be known to think a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas, describing true temperance under the person of Guion, brings him in with his palmer through the cave of Mammon, and the bow of earthly bliss that he might see and know, and yet abstain. Since therefore the knowledge and survey of vice is in this world so necessary to the constituting of human virtue, and the scanning of error to the confirmation of truth, how can we more safely, & with lesser danger scout into the regions of sin and falsity then by reading all manner of tractats, and hearing all manner of reason? And this is the benefit which may be had of books promiscuously read. But of the harm that may result hence three kinds are usually reckn'd. First, is fear'd the infection that may spread; but then all human learning and controversie in religious points must remove out of the world, yea the Bible itself; for that oft times relates blasphemy not nicely, it describes the carnall sense of wicked men not unelegantly, it brings in holiest men passionately murmuring against providence through all the arguments of Epicurus; in other great disputes it answers dubiously & darkly to the common reader: And ask a Talmudest what ails the modesty of his marginaall Keri, that Moses and all the Prophets cannot persuade him to pronounce the textuall Chetiv. For these causes we all know the Bible it selfe put by the Papist into the first rank of prohibited books. The ancientest Fathers must be next remov'd, as Clement of Alexandria, & that Eusebian book of Evangelick preparation, transmitting our ears through a hoard of heathenish obscenities to receive the Gospel. Who finds not that Irenæus, Epiphanius, Jerom, & others discover more heresies then they well confute, and that oft for heresie which is the truer opinion. Nor boots it to say for these, and all the heathen Writers of greatest infection, if it must be thought so, with whom is bound up the life of human learning, that they writ in an unknown tongue, so long as we are sure those languages are known as well to the worst of men, who are both most able, and most diligent to instill the poison they suck, first into the Courts of Princes, acquainting them with the choicest delights, and criticisms of sin. As perhaps did that Petronius whom Nero call'd his Arbiter, the Master of his revels; and that notorious ribald of Arezzo, dreaded, and yet dear to the Italian Courtiers. I name not him for posteritities sake, whom Harry the 8. nam'd in merriment his Vicar of hell. By which comprehendious way all the contagion that foreene books can infuse, will finde a passage to the people farre easier and shorter then an Indian voyage, though it could be sail'd either by the North of Cataio Eastward, or of Canada Westward, while our Spanish licencing gags the English presse never so severely. But on the other side that infection which is from books of controversie in Religion, is more doubtfull & dangerous to the learned, then to the ignorant; & yet those books must be permitted untouch by the licencer. It will be hard to instance where any ignorant man hath bin ever seduce by Papisticall book in English, unlesse it were commended & expounded to him by some of that Clergy; & indeed all such tracts whether false or true are as the Prophesie of Isaiah was to the Eunuch, not to be understood without a guide. But of our Priests and Doctors how many have bin corrupted by studying the comments of Jesuits & Sorbonists, and how fast they could transfuse that corruption into the people, our experience is both late & sad. It is not forgot, since the acute and distinct Arminius was perverted meerly by the perusing of a namelesse discours writ'n at Delf, which at first he took in hand to confute. Seeing therefore that those books, and those in great abundance which are likeliest to taint both life and doctrine, cannot be suppress without the fall of learning, and of all ability in disputation, and that these books of either sort are most and soonest catching to the learned, from whom to the common people what ever is hereticall or dissolute may quickly be convey'd, and that evill manners are as perfectly learnt without books a thousand other ways which cannot be stop't, and evill doctrine not with books can propagate, except a teacher guide, which he might also doe without writing, & so beyond prohibiting, I am not able to unfold, how this cautelous enterprise of licencing can be exempted from the number of vain and impossible attempts. And he who were pleasantly dispos'd, could not well avoid to likn it to the exploit of that gallant man who thought to pound up the crows by shutting his Parkgate. Besides another inconvenient, if learned men be the first receivers out of books & dispredders both of vice and error, how shall the licencers themselves be confided in, unlesse we can conferr upon them, or they assume to themselves above all others in the Land, the grace of infallibility, and uncorruptednesse? And again if it be true, that a wise man like a good refiner can gather gold out of the drossiest volume, and that a fool will be a fool with the best book, yea or without book, there is no reason that we should deprive a wise man of any advantage to his wisdome, while we seek to restrain from a fool, that which being restrain'd will be no hinderance to his folly. For if there should be so much exactnesse always us'd to keep that from him which is unfit for his reading, we should in the judgement of Aristotle not only, but of Salomon, & of our Saviour, not voutsafe him good precepts, & by consequence not willingly admit him to good books, as being certain that a man will make better use of an idle pamphlet, then a fool will do of sacred Scripture. 'Tis next alleg'd we must not expose our selves to temptations without necessity, & next to that, not employ our time in vain things. To both these objections one answer will serve, out of the grounds already laid, that to all men such books are not temptations, nor vanities; but useful drugs & materials wherewith to temper and compose effective and strong medicines, which man's life cannot want. The rest, as children and childish men, who have not the art to qualify & prepare these working minerals, well may be excused to forbear, but hinder'd forcibly they cannot be by all the licencing that Sainted Inquisition could ever yet contrive; which is what I promis'd to deliver next, That this order of licencing conduces nothing to the end for which it was fram'd; & hath almost prevented me by being clear already while thus much hath bin explaining. See the ingenuity of Truth, who when she gets a free & willing hand, opens herself faster, then the pace of method & discourses can overtake her. It was the task which I began with, To shew that no Nation, or well instituted State, if they valu'd books at all, did ever use this way of licencing; and it might be answer'd, that this is a piece of prudence lately discover'd, To which I return, that as it was a thing slight & obvious to think on, for if it had bin difficult to finde out, there wanted not among them long since, who suggested such a course; which they not following, leave us a pattern of their judgement, that it was not the not knowing, but the not approving, which was the cause of their not using it. Plato, a man of high authority indeed, but least of all for his Commonwealth, in the book of his laws, which no City ever yet receiv'd, fed his fancy with making many edicts to his ayrie Burgomasters, which they who otherwise admire him, wish had bin rather buried and excuse'd in the genial cupcakes of an Academick night-sitting. By which laws he seems to tolerat no kind of learning, but by unalterable decree, consisting most of practicall traditions, to the attainment whereof a Library of smaller bulk then his own dialogues would be abundant. And there also enacts that no Poet should so much as read to any privat man, what he had writ'n, untill the Judges and Law-keepers had seen it, and allow'd it: But that Plato meant this Law peculiarly to that Commonwealth which he had imagin'd, and to no other, is evident. Why was he not else a Law-giver to himself, but a transgressor, & to be expell'd by his own Magistrates, both for the wanton epigrams & dialogues which he made, & his perpetuall reading of Sophron Mimus, & Aristophanes, books of grossest infamy, and also for commending the latter of them though he were the malicious libeller of his chief friends, to be read by the Tyrant Dionysius, who had little need of such trash to sue his time on? But that he knew this licencing of Poems had reference and dependence to many other proviso's there set down in his fancied republic, which in this world could have no place: & so neither he himself, nor any Magistrat, or City ever imitated that cours, which tak'n apart from those other collateral injunctions must needs be vain and fruitlesse. For if they fell upon one kind of strictnesse, un-lesse their care were equall to regulat all other things of like aptnes to corrupt the mind, that single endeavours they knew would be but a fond labour; to shut and fortifie one gate against corruption, & be necessitated to leave others round about wide open. If we think to regulat Printing, thereby to rectifie manners, we must regulat all recreations and pastimes, all that is delightfull to man. No musicke must be heard, no song be set or sung, but what is grave and Dorick. There must be licencing dancers, that no gesture, motion, or deportment be taught our youth but what by their allowance shall be thought honest; for such Plato was provided of; It will ask more then the work of twenty licencers to examin all the lutes, the violins, and the gittarrs in every house; they must not be suf-fier'd to prattle as they doe, but must be licenc'd what they may say. And who shall silence all the airs & madrigals, that whisper softnes in chamers? The Windows also, and the Balcone's must be thought on, there are shrewd books, with dangerous Fron-tispieces set to sale; who shall prohibit them, shall twenty licencers? The villages also must have their visitors to enquire what lectures the bagpipe and the rebeck reads ev'n to the ballatry, and the gammuth of every municipal fidler, for these are the Countrymans Arcadia's & his Monte Mayors. Next, what more Nationall corruption, for which England hears ill abroad, then household gluttony; who shall be the rectors of our daily rioting? & what shall be done to inhibit the multitudes that frequent those houses where drunk-ness is sold and harbour'd? Our garments also should be refer'd to the licencing of some more sober work-masters to see them cut into a lesse wanton garb. Who shall regulat all the mixture conversation of our youth, male and female together, as is the fashion of this Country, who shall still appoint what shall be discours'd, what presum'd, & no furder. Lastly, who shall forbid and separat all idle resort, all evill company? These things will be, and must be; but how they shall be lest hurtfull, how lest enticing, herein consists the grave and governing wisdom of a State. To sequester out of the world into Atlantick and Eupotin politics, which never can be drawn into use, will not mend our condition; but to ordain wisely as in this world of evill, in the midd'st whereof God hath plac't us unavoidably. Nor is it Plato's licencing of books will doe this, which necessarily pulls along with it so many other kinds of licencing, as will make us all both ridiculous and weary, and yet frustrat; but those unwritt'n, or at least unconstraining laws of vertuous education, religious and civill nurture, which Plato there mentions, as the bonds and ligaments of the Commonwealth, the pillars and the sustainers of every writ'n Statute; these they be which will bear chief sway in such matters as these, when all licencing will be easily eluded. Impunity & remissenes, for certain are the bane of a Commonwealth, but here the great art lies to discern in what the law is to bid restraint and punishment, and in what things persuasjon only is to work. If every action which is good, or evil in man at ripe years, were to be under pittance, and prescription, and compulsion, what were vertue but a name, what praise could be then due to well doing, what grannemery to be sober, just, or continent? many there be that complain of divin Providence for sufferinge Adam to transgresse, foolish tongues! when God gave him reason, he gave him freedom to choose, for reason is but choosing; he had bin else a meer artificiall Adam, such an Adam as he is in the motions. We our selves esteem not of that obedience, or love, or gift, which is of force: We therfore left him free, set before him a provoking object, ever almost in his eyes herein consisted his merit, here in the right of his reward, the praise of his abstinence. Wherefore did he great passions within us, pleasures round about us, but that these rightly temper'd are the very ingredients of vertue? They are not skillfull considerers of human things, who imagin to remove sin by removing the matter of sin; for, besides that it is a huge heap increasing under the very act of diminishing though some part of it may for a time be withdrawn from some persons, it cannot from all, in such a universall thing as books are; & when this is done, yet the sin remains entire. Though ye take from a covetous man all his treasure, he has yet one jewell left, ye cannot bereave him of his covetousnesse. Banish all objects of lust, shut up all youth into the severest discipline that can be exercis'd in any hermitage, ye cannot make them chaste, that came not thither so; such great care and wisdom is requir'd to the right managing of this point. Suppose we could expell sin by this means; look how much we thus expell of sin, so much we expell of vertue: for the matter of them both is the same; remove that, and ye remove them both alike. This justifies the high providence of God, who though he command us temperance, justice, continence, yet powrs out before us ev'n to a profusenesse all desirable things, and gives us minds that can wander beyond all limit & satiety. Why should we then affect a rigor contrary to the manner of God & of nature, by abridging or scanting those means, which books freely permitted are, both to the trial of vertue, & the exercise of truth. It would be better done to learn that the law must needs be frivolous which goes to restrain things, uncertainly & yet equally working to good, and to evil. And were I the chooser, a dram of well-doing should be preferr'd before many times as much the forcible hindrance of evill-doing. For God sure esteems the growth & compleating of one vertuous person, more then the restraint of ten vitious. And albeit what ever thing we hear or see, sitting, walking, travelling, or conversing may be fitly call'd our book, and is of the same effect that writings are, yet grant the thing to be prohibited were only books, it appears that this order hitherto is far insufficient to the end which it intends. Do we not see, not once or oftner, but weekly that continu'd Court-libell against the Parliament and City, Printed, as the wet sheets can witnes, & dispers't among us for all that licencing can doe? yet this is the prime service a man would think, wherein this order should give proof of it self. If it were executed, you'll say. But certain, if execution be remisse or blindfold now, and in this particular, what will it be hereafter, & in other books. If then the order shall not be vain and frustrat, behold a new labour, Lords and Commons, ye must repeal and proscribe all scandalous & unlicenc't books already printed and divulg'd; after ye have drawn them up into a list, that all may know which are condemn'd, and which not; and ordain that no forren books be deliver'd out of custody, till they have bin read over. This office will require the whole time of not a few overseers, and those no vulgar men. There be also books which are partly useful and excellent, partly culpable & perricious; this work will ask as many more officials to make expurgations & expunctions, that the Commonwealth of learning be not damnify'd. In fine, when the multitude of books increase upon their hands, ye must be fain to catalogue all those Printers who are found frequently offending, and forbidd the importation of their whole suspected typography. In a word, that this your order may be exact, & not deficient, ye must reform it perfectly according to the model of Trent and Sevil, which I know ye abhorre to doe. Yet though ye should condiscend to this, which God forbid, the order still would be but fruitlesse and defective to that end wherefore ye meant it. If to prevent sects & schisms, who is so unread or so uncatechiz'd in story, that hath not heard of many sects refusing books as a hindrance, & preserving their doctrine unmixt for many ages, only by unwritt'n traditions. The Christian faith, for that was once a schism, is not unknown to have spread all over Asia, ere any Gospel or Epistle was seen in writing. If the amendment of manners be aym'd at, look into Italy and Spain, whether those places be one scruple the better, the honester, the wiser, the chastier, since all the invisionall rigor that hath bin executed upon books.

NOTHER reason, whereby to make it plain that this order will misse the end it seeks, consider by the quallity which ought to be in every licencier. It cannot be deny'd but that he who is made judge to sit upon the birth, or death of books whether they may be wafted into this world, or not, had need to be a man above the common measure, both studious, learned, and judicious; there may be else no mean mistakes in the censure of what is passable or not; which is also no mean injury. If he be of such worth as behooves him, there cannot be a more tedious and unpleasing journey-work, a greater losse of time levied upon his head, then to be made the perpetuall reader of unchosen books and pamphlets, oftimes huge volumes. There is no book that is acceptable unless at certain seasons, but to be enjoi’d the reading of that at all times, and in a hand scars legible, whereof three pages would not down at any time in the fairest Print, is an imposition which I cannot beleive how he that values time, and his own studies, or is but of a sensible nostrill should be able to endure. In this one thing I crave leave of the present licencers to be pardon’d for so thinking; who doubtlesse took this office up, looking on it through their obedience to the Parlament, whose command perhaps made all things seem easie and unlaborious to them; but that this short triall hath wearied them out already, their own expressions and excuses to them who make so many journeys to sollicit their licence, are testimony enough. Seeing therefore those who now possess the employment, by all evident signs wish themselves well ridd of it, and that no man of worth, none that is not a plain unthrift of his own hours is ever likely to succeed them, except he mean to put himself to the salary of a Presse corrector, we may easily foresee what kind of licencers we are to expect hereafter, either ignorant, imperious, & remisse, or basely pecuniary. This is what I had to shew wherein this order cannot conduce to that end, whereof it bears the intention.

LASTLY proceed from the no good it can do, to the manifest hurt it causes, in being first the greatest discouragement and affront that can be offer’d to learning and to learned men. It was the complaint and lamentation of Prelats, upon every least breath of a motion to remove pluralities, & distribute more equally Church revennu’s, that then all learning would be for ever dasht and discourag’d. But as for that opinion, I never found cause to think that the tenth part of learning stood or fell with the Clergy: nor could I ever but hold it for a sordid and unworthy speech of any Churchman who had a competency left him. If therefore ye be loath to dishearten utterly and discontent, not the mercenary crew of false pretenders to learning, but the free & ingenious sort of such as evidently were born to study, and love learning for it self, not for lucre, or any other end, but the service of God and of truth, and perhaps that lasting fame and perpetuity of praise which God & good men have consented shall be the reward of those whose publish labours advance the good of mankind, then know, that so far to distrust the be put upon him. What advantage is it to be a man over it is to be a boy at school, if we have only scapt the ferular, to come under the fescu of an Imprimatur? If serious and elaborat writings, as if they were no more then the theam of a Grammar lad under his Pedagogue must not be utter'd without the cursory eyes of a temporizing and extemporizing licencer. He who is not trusted with his own actions, his drift not being known to be evil, and standing to the hazard of law and penalty, has no great argument to think himself reputed in the Commonwealth wherein he was born, for other then a fool or a foreiner. When a man writes to the world, he summons up all his reason and deliberation to assist him; he searches, meditates, is industrious, and likely consults and confers with his judicious friends; after all which done he takes himself to be inform'd in what he writes, as well as any that writ before him; if in this the most consummat act of his fidelity and ripeness, no years, no industry, no former proof of his abilities can bring him to that state of maturity, as not to be still mistrusted and suspected, unlesse he carry all his considerat diligence, all his midnight watchings, & expence of Palladian oyl, to the hasty view of an unleasur'd licencer, perhaps much his younger, perhaps far his inferiour in judgement, perhaps one who never knew the labour of book writing, and if he be not repulst, or slighted, must appear in print like a punie with his guardian, and his censor's hand on the back of his title to be his bayl and surety, that he is no idiot, or seducer, it cannot be but a dishonor and derogation to the author, to the book, to the priviledge and dignity of Learning. And what if the author shall be one so copious of fancie, as to have many things well worth the adding, come into his mind after licencing, while the book is yet under the Presse, which not seldom happ'n's to the best and diligentest writers; and that perhaps a dozen times in one book. The Printer dares not go beyond his licenc't copy; so often then must the author trudge to his leavgiver, that those his new insertions may be viewd; & many a jaunt will be made, ere that licencer, for it must be the same man, can either be found, or found at leisure; mean while either the Presse must stand still, which is no small damage, or the author loose his accurat thoughts, & send the book forth wors then he had made it, which to a diligent writer is the greatest melancholy and vexation that can befall. And how can a man teach with authority, which is the life of teaching, how can he be a Doctor in his book as he ought to be, or else had better be silent, whenas all he teaches, all he deliver'd, is but under the tuition, under the correction of his patriarchal licencer to blot or alter what precisely accords not with the hidebound humor which he calls his judgement. When every acute reader upon the first sight of a pedantick licencer, will be ready with these like words to ding the book a coits distance from him, I hate a pupil teacher, I endure not an instructor that comes to me under the wardship of an overseeing fist. I know nothing of the licencer, but that I have his own hand here for his arrogance; who shall warrant me his judgement? The State Sir, replies the Stationer, but has a quick return, The State shall be my governours, but not my criticks; they may be mistak'n in the choice of a licencer, as easily as this licencer may be mistak'n in an author. This is some common stuffe, & he might adde from Sir Francis Bacon, That such author, in'd books are but the language of the times. For though a licencer should happen to be judicious more then ordinary, which will be a great jeopardy of the next succession, yet his very office, and his commission enjoyns him to let passe nothing but what is vulgarly receiv'd already. Nay, which is more lamentable, if the work of any deceased author, though never so famous in his life time, and even to this day, come to their hands for licence to be Printed, or Reprinted, if there be found in his book one sentence of a ventrous edge, utter'd in the height of zeal, and who knows whether it might not be the dictat of a divine Spirit, yet not suitcomprehended in any twenty capacities how good soever, much lesse that it should not passe except their superintendence be over it, except it be sifted and strain'd with their strainers, that it should be uncurrant without their manuall stamp. Truth & understanding are not such wares as to be monopoliz'd and traded in by tickets and statutes, and standards. We must not think to make a staple commodity of all the knowledge in the Land, to mark & licence it like our broad cloath, and our wooll packs. What is it but a servitude like that impos'd by the Philistims, not to be allow'd the sharpening of our own axes and coulters, but we must repair from all quarters to twenty licencing forges. Had any one writ'tn and divulg'd erroneous things & scandalous to honest life, misusing and forfeiting the esteem had of his reason among men, if after conviction this only censure were adjjug'd him, that he should never henceforth write, but what were first examin'd by an appointed officer, whose hand should be annext to passe his credit for him, that now he might be safely read, it could not be apprehended lesse then a disgracefull punishment. Whence to include the whole Nation, and those that never yet thus offended, under such a diffident and suspectfull prohibition, may plainly be understood what a disparagement it is. So much the more, when as dettors and delinquents may walk abroad without a keeper, but unoffensive books must not stirre forth without a visible jaylor in this title. Nor is it to the common people lesse then a reproach; for if we be so jealous over them, as that we dare not trust them with an English pamphlet, what doe we but censure them for a giddy, vitious, and ungrounded people; in such a sick and weak estate of faith and discretion, as to be able to take nothing down but through the pipe of a licencer. That this is care or love of them, we cannot pretend, when as in those Popish places where the Lity are most hated and despis'd the same strictnes is us'd over them. Wisdom we cannot call it, because it stops but one breach of licence, nor that neither; whenas those corruptions which it seeks to prevent, break in faster at other dores which cannot be shut.

And in conclusion it reflects to the disrepute of our Ministers also, of whose labours we should hope better, and of the proficiencie which thir flock reaps by them, then that after all this light of the Gospel which is, and is to be, and all this continuall preaching, they should be still frequented with such an unprincipl'd, unedify'd, and faithfull, as that the whisse of every new pamphlet should stagger them out of their catechisme, and Christian walking. This may have much reason to discourse the Ministers when such a low conceit is had of all their exhortations, and the benefiting of their hearers, as that they are not thought fit to be turn'd loose to three sheets of paper without a licencer, that all the Sermons, all the Lectures preach, printed, vented in such numbers, and such volumes, as have now wellnigh made all other books unfaulable, should not be armor anough against one single enchiridion, without the castle of St. Angelo of an Imprimitur.

AND lest som should persuade ye, Lords and Commons, that these arguments of lerned mens discouragement at this your order, are meer flourishes, and not real, I could recount what I have seen and heard in other Countries, where this kind of inquisition tyrannizes; when I have sat among their lerned men, for that honor I had, and bin counted happy to be born in such a place of Philosophic freedom, as they suppos'd England was, while themselves did nothing but bemoan the servil condition into which lerning amongst them was brought; that this was it which had damped the glory of Italian wits; that nothing had bin there writ'n now these many years but flattery and fustian. There it was that I found & visited the famous Galileo grown old, a prisner to the Inquisition, for thinking in Astronomy otherwise then the Franciscan and Dominican licencers thought. And though I knew that England then was groaning loudest under the Prelaticall yoak, nevertheless I tooke it as a pledge of future happines, that other Nations were so perswaded of her liberty. Yet was it beyond my hope that those Worthies were then breathing in her air, who should be her leaders to such a deliverance, as shall never be forgott'n by any revolution of time that this world hath to finish. When that was once begun, it was as little in my fear, that what words of complaint I heard among lerned men of other parts utter'd against the Inquisition, the same I should hear by as lerned men at home utter'd in time of Parliament against an order of licencing; & that so generally, that when I disclos'd my self a companion of their discontent, I might say, if without envy, that he whom an honest quaesitorship had indar'd to the Sicilians, was not more by them importun'd against Verres, then the favourable opinion which I had among many who honour ye, & are known and respected by ye, loaded me with entreaties and perswasions, that I would not despair to lay together that which just reason should bring into my mind, toward the removal of an undeserved thraldom upon lerning. That this is not therefore the disburdening of a particular fancy, but the common grievance of all those who had prepar'd their minds & studies above the vulgar pitch to advance truth in others, and from others to entertain it, thus much may satisfie. And in their name I shall for neither friend nor foe conceal what the generall murmur is; that if it come to inquisitioning again, and licencing, and that we are so timorous of our selfs, & so suspicious of all men, as to fear each book, and the shaking of every leaf, before we know what the contents are, if some who but of late were little better than silent from preaching, shall come now to
truth that flies up in the faces of them who seek to tread it out. This order therefore may prove a nursing mother to sects, but I shall easily show how it will be a step-dame to Truth: and first by disenabling us to the maintenance of what is known already.

ELL knows he who uses to consider that our faith and knowledge thrives by exercise, as well as our limbs and complexion. Truth is compar'd in Scripture to a streaming fountain; if her waters flow not in a perpetuall progression, they sick 'n into a muddy pool of conformity & tradition. A man may be a heretic in the truth; and if he believe things only because his Pastor says so, or the Assembly so determins, without knowing other reason, though his belief be true, yet the very truth he holds, becomes his heresie. There is not any burden that som would gladly post off to another, then the charge & care of their Religion. There be, who knows not that there be of Protestants and professors who live and dye in as arrant an implicit faith, as any lay Papist of Loretto. A wealthy man addicted to his pleasure and to his profits, finds Religion to be a traffick so entangl'd, and of so many piddling accounts, that of all mysteries he cannot skill to keep a stock going upon that trade. What should he doe? fain he would have the name to be religious, fain he would bear up with his neighbors in that. What does he therefore, but resolvs to give over toying, & to find himself out som factor, to whose care & credit he may commit the whole managing of his religious affairs; som Divine of note & estimation that must be. To him he adhers, resigns the whole ware-house of his religion, with all the locks & keyes into his custody; and indeed makes the very person of that man his religion; esteems his associating with him a sufficient evidence and commendatory of his own piety. So that a man may say his religion is now no more within himself, but is become a divindall movable, and goes and comes neer him, according as that good man frequents the house. He entertains him, gives him gifts, feasts him, lodges him; his religion comes home at night, praiies, is liberally sup't, & sumptuously laid to sleep, rises, is saluted, & after the malmsey, or some well spic't brague, and better breakfasted then he whose morning appetite would have gladly fed on green figs between Bethany and Jerusalem, his Religion walks abroad at eight, and leaves his kind entertainer in the shop trading all day without his religion.

ANOTHER sort there be who when they hear that all things shall be order'd, all things regulated and setl'd; nothing writ'n but what passes through the customhouse of certain Publicans that have the tunaging and the pounding of all free spok'n truth, will strait give themselves up into your hands, mak'em & cut'em out what religion ye please; there be delights, there be recreations and jolly tastes that will fetch the day about from sun to sun, and rock the tedious year as in a delightfull dream. What need they torture their heads with that which others have tak'n so strictly, & so unalterably into their own pourveying. These are the fruits which a dull ease and cessation of our knowledge will bring forth among the people. How goodly, and how to be wisht were such an obedient unanimity as this, what a fine conformity would it stanch us all into? doubles a stanch and solid peace of framework, as any January could freeze together.

For much better will be the ev'n among the Clergy themselves; it is no new thing never heard of before, for a parochiall Minister, who has his reward, and is at his Hercules pillars in a warm benefice, to be easily inclinable, if he have nothing else that may rouse up his studies, to finish his circuit in an English concordance and a topick folio, the gatherings & savings of a sober graduatship, a Harmony & a Catena, treading the constant round of certain common doctrinall heads, attended with their uses, motives, marks and means, out of which, as out of an alphabet or sol fa by forming & transforming, joyning and disjoyning variously a little book-craft, and two hours meditation might furnish him unspeakably to the performance of more then a weekly charge of sermoning: not to reck'n up the infinit helps of interlinearies, breviaries, synopses, & other loitering gear. But as for the multitude of Sermons ready printed and pil'd up, on every text that is not difficult, our London trading St. Thomas in his vestry, and adde to boot St. Martin, and St. Hugh, have not within their halow'd limits more vendible ware of all sorts ready made: so that penury he never need fear of Pulpit provision, having where so plenteously to refresh his magazin. But if his rear and flanks be not impald, if his back dore be not secur'd by the rigid licencer, but that a bold book may now & then issue forth, & give the assault to some of his old collections in their trenches, it will concern him then to keep watch, to stand in watch, to set good guards & sentinels about his receiv'd opinions, to walk the round & counter round with his fellow inspectors, fearing lest any of his flock be seduct', who also then would be better instructed, better exercis'd and disciplin'd. And God send that the fear of this diligence which must then be us'd, doe not make us affect the laziness of a licencing Church.

Or if we be sure we are in the right, and doe not hold the truth guilty, which becomes not, if we ourselves condemn not our own weak & frivolous teaching, and the people for an untaught and irreligious gadding rout, what can be more fair, then when a man judicious, learned, and of a conscience, for ought we know, as good as theirs that taught us what we know, shall not privily from house to house, which is more dangerous, but openly by writing publish to the world what his opinion is, what his reasons, and wherefore that which is now thought cannot be sound. Christ urg'd it as wherewith to justify himself, that he preach in publick; yet writing is more publick then preaching; & more easie to refutation, if need be, there being so many whose businesse & profession meerly it is, to be the champions of Truth; which if they neglect, what can be imputed but their sloth, or inability?

HUS much we are hinder'd and disair'd by this cours of licencing towards the true knowledge of what we seem to know. For how much it hurts and hinders the licencers themselves in the calling of their Ministry, more then any secular employment, if they will discharge that office as they ought, so that of necessity they must neglect either the one duty or the other, I insist not, because it is a particular, but leave it to their own conscience, how they will decide it there.

HERE is yet behind of what I purpos'd to lay open, the incredible losse, and detrement that this plot of licencing puts us to, more then if som enemy at sea should stop up all our hav'ns & ports, and creeks; it hinders and retards the importation of our richest Marchandize, Truth; nay it was first establishd and put in practice by Antichristian malice and mystery on set purpose to extinguish, if it were possible, the light of Reformation, & to settle falsehood; little differing from that policie wherewith the Turk upholds his Alcoran, by the prohibition of Printing. 'Tis not deny'd, but gladly confess, we are to send our thanks and vows to heav'n louder then most of Nations, for that great measure of truth which we enjoy, especially in those main points between us and the Pope, with his appertinences the Prelats: but he who thinks we are to pitch our tent here, & have attain'd the utmost prospect of reformation, that the mortalle glasse wherein we contemplate, can shew us, till we come to beatific vision, that man by this very opinion declares, that he is yet farre short of Truth.

RUTH indeed came once into the world with her divine Master, and was a perfect shape most glorious to look on: but when he ascended, & his Apostles after him were laid asleep, then strait arose a wicked race of deceivers, who as that story goes of the Egyptian Typhon with his conspirators, how they dealt with the good Osiris, took the virgin Truth, hewd her lovely form into thousand pieces, and scatter'd them to the four winds. From that time ever since, the sad friends of Truth, such as durst appear, imitating the carefull search that Isis made for the mangi'd body of Osiris, went up and down gathering up limb by limb still as they could find them. We have not yet found them all, Lords and Commons, nor ever shall doe, till her Masters second comming; he shall bring together every joynt & member, & shall mould them into an immortall feature of loveliness and perfection. Suffer not these licencing prohibitions to stand at every place of opportunity forbidding and disturbing them that continue seeking, that continue to do our obsequies to the torn body of our martyr’d Saint. We boast our light; but if we look not wisely on the Sun itself, it smites us into darkness. Who can discern those planets that are oft Combust, and those stars of brightest magnitude that rise and set with the Sun, until the opposite motion of their orbs bring them to such a place in the firmament, where they may be seen evening or morning. The light which we have gain’d, was giv’n us, not to be ever staring on, but by it to discover onward things more remote from our knowledge. It is not the unfrocking of a Priest, the unmitring of a Bishop, & the removing him from off the Presbyterian shoulders that will make us a happy Nation, no, if other things as great in the Church, and in the rule of life both economicall & politickall be not lookt into and reform’d, we have lookt so long upon the blaze that Zuinglius and Calvin hath beacon’d up to us, that we are stark blind. There be who perpetually complain of schisms and sects, and make it such a calamity that any man dissents from their maxims. ’Tis their own pride and ignorance which causes the disturbing, who neither will hear with meekness, nor can convince, yet all must be supprest which is not found in their Syntagma. They are the troublers, they are the dividers of unity, who neglect & per... which is above all this, the favour and the love of heav'n we have great argument to think in a peculiar manner propitious & propending towards us.
Why else was this Nation choos'n before any other, that out of her as out of Sion should be proclaim'd & sounded forth the first tidings and trumpet of Reformation to all Europ. And had it not bin the obstinat perversnes of our Prelats against the divine & admirable spirit of Wicklef, to suppress him as a schismatic and innovator, perhaps neither the Bohemian Husse & Jerom, no nor the name of Luther, or of Cal-vyn had bin ever known: the glory of reforming all our neighbours had bin compleatly ours. But now, as our ob-durat Clergy have with violence demean'd the matter, we are become hitherto the latest and the backwardest Schollers, of whom God offer'd to have made us the teachers. Now once again by all concurrence of signs, & by the generall instinct of holy and devout men, as they daily and solemnly expresse their thoughts, God is decreing to begin some new & great period in his Church, ev'n to the reforming of Reformation it self: what does he then but reveal Himself to his servants and as his manner is, first to his English-men; I say as his manner is, first to us, though we mark not the method of his counsels, and are unworthy. Behold now this vast City; a City of refuge, the mansion house of liberty, encompast and surrounded with his protection; the shop of warre hath not there more anvils and hammers walking, to fashion out the plates and instruments of armed Justice in defence of beleaguer'd Truth, then there be pens and heads there, sitting by their studious lamps, musing, searching, revolving new notions and idea's where, with to present, as with their homage and their fealty the approaching Reformation: others as fast reading, trying all things, assenting to the force of reason and convincemence. What could a man require more from a Nation so pliant and so prone to seek after knowledge. What wants there to such a to-wardly and pregnant soile, but wise & faithfull labourers, to make a knowing people, a Nation of Prophets, of Sages, and of Worthies. We reck'n more than five months yet to harvest; there need not be five weeks, had we but eyes to lift up, the fields are white already. Where there is much desire to learn, there of necessity will be much arguing, much writing, many opinions; for opinion in good men is but knowledge in the making. Under these fantastic terrors of sect and schism, we wrong the earnest and zealous thirst after knowledge and understanding which God hath stirr'd up in this City.
What some lament of, we rather should rejoyce at, should rather praise this pious forwardness among men, to re-assume the ill deputed care of their Religion into their own hands again. A little generous prudence, a little forbearance of one another, & som grain of charity might win all these diligences to joyn, & unite in one generall and brotherly search after Truth; could we but forgoe this Prelaticall tradition of crowding free consciences & Christian liberties into canons and precepts of men. I doubt not, if some great and worthy stranger should come among us, wise to discern the mould & temper of a people, and how to govern it, observing the high hopes and aims, the diligent alacrity of our extended thoughts and reasonings in the pursuance of truth and freedom, but that he would cry out as Pirrhus did, admiring the Roman docility & courage, if such were my Epirots. I would not despair the greatest design that could be attempted to make a Church or Kingdom happy. Yet these are the men cry’d out against for schismaticks and sectaries; as if, while the Temple of the Lord was building, some cutting, some squaring the marble, others hewing the cedars, there should be a sort of irrational men who could not consider there must be many schisms & many dissections made in the quarry and in the timber, ere the house of God can be built. And when every stone is laid artfully together, it cannot be united into a continuity, it can but be contiguous in this world; neither can every piece of the building be of one form; nay rather the perfection consists in this, that out of many moderat varieties and brotherly dissimilitudes that are not vastly disproportionall arises the godly & the gracefull symmetry that commends the whole pile & structure. Let us therefore be more considerat builders, more wise in spirituall architecture, when great reformation is expected. For now the time seems come, wherein Moses the great Prophet may sit in heav’n rejoicing to see that memorable and glorious wish of his fulfilled, when notonly our sev’nty Elders, but all the Lords people are become Prophets. No marvell then though some men, and some good men too perhaps, but young in goodnesse, as Joshua then was, envy them. They fret, and out of their own weaknes are in agony, lest those divisions and subdivisions will undoe us. The adversarie again applauds, and waits the hour, when they have brancht themselves out, saith he, small anough into parties and partitions, then will be our time. Fool! he sees not the firm root, out of which we all grow, though into branches: nor will beware untill hee see our small divided maniples cutting through at every angle of his ill united & unwieldy brigade. And that we are to hope better of all these supposed sects and schisms, and that we shall not need that solicitude honest perhaps though over timorous of them that vex in his behalfe, but shall laugh in the end, at those malicious applauders of our differences, I have these reasons to perswade me.

FIRST, when a City shall be as it were besiegd & blockt about, her navigable river infested, inrodes and incursions round, defiance and battell oft rumor’d to be marching up ev’n to her walls, and suburb trenches, that then the people, or the greater part, more then at other times, wholly tak’n up with the study of highest & most important matters to be reform'd, should be disputing, reasoning, reading, inventing, discoursing, ev'n to a rarity, and admiration, things not before discoursed or writ't of, argues first a singular good will, contentednesse and confidence in your prudent foresight, and safe government, Lords & Commons; and from thence derives itself to a gallant bravery & well grounded contempt of their enemies, as if there were no small number of as great spirits among us, as his was, who when Rome was nigh besieg'd by Hanibal, being in the City, bought that piece of ground at no cheap rate, whereon Hanibal himself encampt his own regiment. Next it is a lively & cherfull presage of our happy successes and victory. For as in a body, when the blood is fresh, the spirits pure and vigorous, not only to vital, but to rational faculties, & those in the acutest, & the pertest operations of wit and suttlety, it argues in what good plight and constitution the body is, so when the cheerfulnesse of the people is so sprightly up, as that it has, not only wherewith to guard well its own freedom and safety, but to spare, and to bestow upon the solidest and sublimest points of controversie, and new invention, it betok'n us not degenerated, nor drooping to a fatal decay, but casting off the old & wrincl'd skin of corruption to outlive these pangs and wax young again, entering the glorious waies of Truth and prosperous vertue destin'd to become great and honourable in these latter ages. Methinks I see in my mind a noble & puissant Nation rousing herself like a strong man after sleep, & shaking her invincible locks: Methinks I see her as an Eagle musing her mighty youth, & kindling her undazl'd eyes at the full midday beam; purging and unscaling her long abused sight at the fountain it self of heav'nly radiance, while the whole noise of timorous and flocking birds, with those also that love the twinkle, flutter about, amaz'd at what she means, and in their envious gabble would prognosticat a year of sects and schisms.

What should ye doe then, should ye suppress all this floowry crop of knowledge and new light sprung up & yet springing daily in this City, should ye set an Oligarchy of twenty ingrossers over it, to bring a famin upon our minds again, when we shall know nothing but what is measur'd to us by their bushe! Believe it, Lords & Commons, they who counsell ye to such a suppressing, doe as good as bid ye suppress yourselves; and I will soon shew how. If it be desir'd to know the immediat cause of all this free writing and free speaking, there cannot be assign'd a truer than your own mild, and free, and human government; it is the liberty, Lords and Commons, which your own valorous & happy counsels have purchas't us, liberty which is the nurse of all great wits; this is that which hath enfranchis't, enlarg'd and lifted up our apprehensions degrees above themselves. Ye cannot make us now lesse capable, lesse knowing, lesse eagerly pursuing of the truth, unless ye first make your selves, that made us so, lesse the lovers, lesse the founders of our true liberty. We can grow ignorant again, brutish, formal, and slavish, as ye found us; but you then must first become that which ye cannot be, oppressive, arbitrary, and tyrannous, as they were from whom ye have free’d us. That our hearts are now more capacious, our thoughts more erected to the search and expectation of greatest and exactest things, is the issue of your owne vertu propagated in us; ye cannot suppressse that unless ye reinforce an abrogated & mercilesse law, that fathers may dispatch at will their own children. And who shall then sticke closest to ye, and excite others? not he who takes up armes for cote and conduct, and his four nobles of Danegelt. Although I dispraise not the defence of just immunities, yet love my peace better, if that were all. Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties.

WAT would be best advis’d then, if it be found so hurtful and so unequall to suppressse opinions for the newnes, or the unsutablenes to a customary acceptance, will not be my task to say; I only shall repeat what I have learnt from one of your own honourable number, a right noble and pious lord, who had he not sacrific’d his life and fortunes to the Church and Commonwealth, we had not now mist and bewayl’d a worthy and undoubted patron of this argument. Ye know him I am sure; yet I for honours sake, and may it be eternall to him, shall name him, the Lord Brook. He writing of Episcopacy, & by the way treating of sects and schisms, left Ye his vote, or rather now the last words of his dying charge, which I know will ever be of dear and honour’d regard with Ye, so full of meeknes, and breathing charity, that next to his last testament, who bequeath’d love & peace to his Disciples, I cannot call to mind where I have read or heard words more mild and peace- full. He there exhorts us to hear with patience and humility those, however they be miscall’d, that desire to live purely, in such a use of Gods Ordinances, as the best guidance of their conscience gives them, and to tolerat them, though in some disconformity to our selves. The book it self will tell us more at large being publisht to the world, and dedicated to the Parliament by him who both for his life and for his death deserves, that what advice he left be not laid by without perusal.

AND now the time in special is, by priviledge to write & speak what may help to the further discussing of matters in agitation. The Temple of Janus with his two controversial faces might now not unsignificantly be set open. And though all the windes of doctrin were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do injuriously by licencing and prohibiting to mis doubt her strength. Let her & Falshood grapple; who ever knew Truth put to the worst, in a free & open encounter. Her confuting is the best & surest suppressing. He who hears what praying there is for light & clearer knowledge to be sent down among us, would think of other matters to be constituted beyond the discipline of Geneva, fram'd & fabric't already to our hands. Yet when the new light which we beg for shines in upon us, there be who envy and oppose, if it come not first in at their casements. What a collusion is this, when we are exhorted by the wise man to use diligence, to seek for wisdom as for hidd'n treasures early & late, that another order shall enjoin us to know nothing but by statute. When a man hath bin labouring the hardest labour in the deep mines of knowledge, hath furnisht out his findings in all their equipage, drawn forth his reasons as it were a battell raung'd, scatter'd and defeated all objections in his way, calls out his adversary into the plain, offers him the advantage of wind and sun, if he please; only that he may try the matter by dint of argument, for his opponents then to sculk, to lay ambushments, to keep a narrow bridge of licencing where the challenger should passe, though it be valour enough in shouldiership, is but weakness & cowardise in the wars of Truth. For who knows not that Truth is strong next to the Almighty; she needs no policies, no stratagems, no licencings to make her victorious, those are the shifts and the defences that error uses against her power: give her but room, and do not bind her when she sleeps, for then she speaks not true, as the old Porteus did, who spake oracles only when he was caught and bound, but then rather she turns herself into all shapes, except her own, and perhaps tunes her voice according to the time, as Micaiah did before Ahab, until she be adjur'd into her own likenes. Yet is it not impossible that she may have more shapes then one. What else is all that rank of things indifferent, where in Truth may be on this side, or on the other, without being unlike herself. What but a vain shadow else is the abolition of those ordinances, that hand writing may'd to the crosse, what great purchase is this Christian liberty which Paul so often boasts of. His doctrine is, that he who eats or eats not, regards a day, or regards it not, may doe either to the Lord. How many other things might be tolerated in peace, & left to conscience, had we but charity, and were it not the chief strong hold of our hypocrisie to be ever judging one another. I fear yet this iron yoke of outward conformity hath left a slavish print upon our necks; the ghost of alinement decency yet haunts us. We stumble and are impatient at the least dividing of one visible congregation from another, though it be not in fundamentall; and through our forwardnes to suppress, and our backwardnes to recover any, enthrall'd peece of truth out of the gripe of custom, we care not to keep truth separated from truth. which is the fiercest rent and disunion of all. We do not see that while we still affect by all means a rigid externall formality, we may as soon fall again into a grosse conforming stupidity, a stark and dead congealment of wood and hay and stubble forc't and frozen together, which is more to the sudden degenerating of a Church than many subdichotomies of petty schisms. Not that I can think well of every light separation, or that all in a Church is to be expected gold & silver & precious stones: it is not possible for man to sever the wheat from the tares, the good fish from the other frie; that must be the Angels Ministery at the end of mortall things. Yet if all cannot be of one mind, as who looks they should be? this doubles is more wholesome, more prudent, and more Christian that many be tolerated, rather then all compell'd. I mean not tolerated Popery, and open superstition, which as it ex-tirpats all religions and civill suprema-cies, so it self should be extirpat, pro-vised first that all charitable and com-passionat means be us'd to win and regain the weak and misled: that also which is impious or evil absolutely either against faith or maners no law can possibly permit, that intends not to unlaw it self: but those neighboring differences, or rather indifferencies, are what I speak of, whether in some point of doctrine or of discipline, which though they may be many, yet need not interrupt the unity of Spirit, if we could but find among us the bond of peace. In the mean while if any one would write, & bring his helpfull hand to the slow-moving Reformation we labour under, if Truth have spok'n to him before others, or but seem'd at least to speak, who hath so bejesuited us that we should trouble that man with asking licence to doe so worthy a deed? and not consider this; that if it come to prohibiting, there is not ought more likely to be prohibited then truth it self; whose first appearance to our eyes bleard and dimm'd with prejudice & custom, is more unsightly & unplausible then many errors, ev'n as the per-sion of many a great man slight and contemptible to see to. And what doe they tell us vainly of new opinions, when this very opinion of theirs, that none must be heard, but whom they like, is the worst and newest opinion of all others; and is the chief cause why sects & schisms doe so much abound, and true knowledge is kept at distance from us; besides yet a greater danger which is in it. For when God shakes a Kingdome with strong and healthfull commotions to a generall reforming, 'tis not untrue that many sectaries and false teachers are then busiest in seduc-ing; but yet more true it is, that God then raises to his own work men of rare abilities, and more then common industry not only to look back and re-vice what hath bin taught heretofore, but to gain furder & goe on, some new enlightn'd steps in the discovery of truth. For such is the order of Gods en-lighting his Church, to dispense and deal out by degrees his beam, so as our earthly eyes may best sustaine it. Neither is God appointed and confin’d, where and out of what place these his chosen shall be first heard to speak; for he sees not as man sees, chooses not as man chooses, lest we should devote our selves again to set places, and assemblies & outward callings of men; planting our faith one while in the old Convocation house, and another while in the Chappell at Westminster; when all the faith and religion that shall be there canoniz’d, is not sufficient without plain convicement, and the charity of patient instruction to supple the least bruise of conscience, to edifie the meanest Christian, who desires to walk in the Spirit, and not in the letter of human trust, for all the number of voices that can be there made; no though Harry the 7. himself there, with all his leige tombs about him, should lend them voices from the dead, to swell their number. And if the men be erroneous who appear to be the leading schismaticks, what withholds us but our sloth, our self-will, and distrust in the right cause, that we do not give them gentle meetings & gentle dismissions, that we debate not & examine the matter throughly with liberal & frequent audience; if not for their sakes, yet for our own? seeing no man who hath tasted learning, but will confess the many waies of profiting by those who not contented with stale receive are able to manage, & set forth new positions to the world. And were they but as the dust and cinders of our feet, so long as in that notion they may serve to polish & brighten the armoury of Truth, ev’n for that respect they were not utterly to be cast away. But if they be of those whom God hath fitted for the speciall use of these times with eminent and ample gifts, and those perhaps neither among the Priests, nor among the Pharisees, and we in the hast of a precipitant zeal shall make no distinction, but resolve to stop their mouths, because we fear they come with new & dangerous opinions, as we commonly fore-judge them ere we understand them, no lesse then woe to us, while thinking thus to defend the Gospel, we are found the persecutors.

HERE have bin not a few since the beginning of this Parliament, both of the Presbyteries & others who by their unlicent books to the contempt of an Imprimatur first broke that triple ice clung about our hearts, and taught the people to see day: I hope that none of those were the swivers to renew upon us this bondage which they themselves have wrought so much good by contempting. But if neither the check that Moses gave to young Joshua, nor the countermand which our Saviour gave to young John, who was so ready to prohibit those whom he thought unlicensed, be not enough to admonish our Elders how unacceptable to God their testy mood of prohibiting is, if neither their own remembrance what evil hath abounded in the Church by this lett of licencing, and what good they themselves have begun by transgressing it, be not enough, but that they will perswade, & execute the most Dominican part of the Inquisition over us, and are already with one foot in the stirrup so active at suppressing, it would be no unequall distribution in the first place to suppress the suppressors themselves; whom the change of their condition hath put up, more then their late experience of harder times hath made wise.

AND as for regulating the Presse, let no man think to have the honour of advising ye better then your selves have done in that Order publishd next before this, that no book be Printed, unless the Printers and the Authors name, or at least the Printers be registred. Those which otherwise come forth, if they be found mischievous & libellous, the fire and the executioner will be the timeliest & the most effectuall remedy, that man's prevention can use. For this authentic Spanish policy of licencizing books, if I have said ought, will prove the most unlicenc't book it self within a short while; and was the immediat image of a Star-chamber decree to that purpose made in those very times when that Court did the rest of those her pious works, for which she in now fall'n from the Starres with Lucifer. Whereby ye may guesse what kinde of State prudence, what love of the people, what care of Religion, or good manners there was at the contriving, although with singular hypocrisie it pretended to bind books to their good behaviour. And how it got the upper hand of your precedent Order so well constituted before, if we may beleve those men whose profession gives them cause to enquire most, it may be doubted there was in it the fraud of some old patentees and monopolizers in the trade of book-selling; who under pretence of the poor in their Company not to be defrauded, & the just retaining of each man his severall copy, which God forbid should be gainsaid, brought divers glosing colours to the House, which were indeed but colours, & serving to no end except it be to exercise a superiority over their neighbours, men who doe not therefore labour in an honest profession to which learning is indetted, that they should be made other mens vassals. Another end is thought was aym'd at by some of them in procuring by petition this Order, that having power in their hands, malignant books might the easier scape abroad, as the event shews. But of these Sophisms & Elenchs of marchandise I skill not: This I know, that errors in a good government and in a bad are equally almost incident; for what Magistrate may not be misinform'd, and much the sooner, if liberty of Printing be redcut into the power of a few; but to redresse willingly & speedily what hath bin err'd, and in highest authority to esteem a plain advertisement more then others have done a sumptuous bribe, is a vertue (honour'd Lords and Commons) answerable to Your highest actions, and whereof none can participat but greatest and wisest men.

THE END.
